What is We'to'pi'ah?

An intro

confrontationally nonviolent-oriented, anti-authoritarian;
where dissent is welcome

you've heard of Utopia.... now here comes WE'to'pia'h. Basically, it's about the pivotal affirmation & solidarity of ALL, including ALL informal voices no matter at which level of articulation. To be "truly" heard & to facilitate such listening as an ongoing process, realizing the value. But not merely heard, celebrated, or at least significantly spotlighted in all the jiu-jitsu'd fanfare of today's media & cultural hyping, only with the spin oriented to authentic, rather than superficial analysis.

We'to'pia'h is also focused on putting all manipulation, all ideology, all propaganda on the proverbial "table" of ALL's critical scrutiny, in ongoing creative processings, realizing this KEY excellence which has a habit of liberating people rather than perpetuating divisions.

our myriad systematic critical self-theory (i.e. like that posited by Jason McQuinn on P. 35 of the journal "Modern Slavery," issue #3) & demystification is also key to see the above, sometimes difficult to see "elite" crap for what it is: The ways (?) in which alienated groups of varying "elites" attempt to exploit naiveté & "lazy" thinking of we, the stupidized (!) masses. So that they (the so-called "elites") can not only achieve the ultimately empty "rewards" of material wealth, but also so that the institutions which employ them & whose "interests" they represent can continue to hold their privileged & well-funded status under the auspices of all martial'ly-challenged entities (such as the State & its real steerers).

Visionary Zine for Uncommon Locality

Wow, someone actually daring to be authentic...
It's all Bookshit
visionary creatives Get-together informally our with becoming magick already defeated too much?

The bottom line: puzzling through & affirming ALL the "germs of truth" of which-ever ideology (or rigidized belief system) that drew us originally to any of the myriad notions we have allowed passage thru our learned armors (in our collective search for meaningful community in the context of living in societies (whose policies) forbid such authenticity, because of the fear that such will enable us to rise up and truly challenge their hegemony.

Finally, We'to'pi'a' is an imperfect theory inviting serious input from all whom've grown sick & tired of Same Old Again. The same old lies & out-of-context hype prevalent in the entire (Left, Right, & "center".) neocolonial project. (I.e. If "freedumb isn't free", so it follows that 'free' isn't freedumb.) We fool (?) thinQers (heh) look for & find "a common humanity" across all artificially imposed or actual barriers.

And this theory does not shy away from the toughest challenges (& challengers). A "post-neocolonial," unsettling approach towards making & maintaining bridge-ish communications, & in quality time, depth connection. No matter what! --While not allowing ourselves to have our hearts trampled by out-of-balance, or other distrusting survivors (of society abuse, et al).

And yet, conflict. Conflict is "looked behind", it is embraced & re-imagined. It is challenged via "enrichuals" & cultural ceremonial-ing & creative ways to "re-boot" all the media norms we now take for granted. For example, imagine soap-operas oriented to REAL social difficulties like IWW-style unions. or anything else you in your heart, would REALLY rather watch! the basic angle? Allowing dissenters & challengers to optimumly explore their beliefs fully via diverse forms of fantasy realism. something on par to R.D. Laing's approach to so-called "schizophrenics". With "radical's radical" empathizer teams assisting "rebellious" teens, "criminals," & even dyed-in-the-wool haters to explore the reality of their desires. No "pie-in-the-sky" future, but possible rite here in the power of NOW!

The Orrior Way Part One: Righting the Her/History of the Tribes

We are all descendants of tribes. And while descendants of all tribes were forced, manipulated, and otherwise coerced to adapt to the ways of those invading them (i.e. monoculture-ized forms of being), the heart of their ways was not, as many would have you believe, about pain and stupidity, like war. The heart of tribal ways, originally, reflected harmonies with the ways of Mom Earth such as interdependence, extended families, depth listening, intense inspired input (i.e. the vision quest), and ways of being that had no conception of the dumbed-down ways of war-rior beliefs. example: Koyaanisqatsi reality

The managers of popularized cult-ure want us to believe in & worship stupidity against all (including oneself), so they've manipulated our understandings of reality & have us focusing only on the most last-ditch efforts of tribal peoples under concerted attack in the context of invading societies commanding full war modes of all subordinates, including settlers.

The way of the orriors (or-riors) –one who thinks & goes beyond war—is closer to the heart of the beautiful spirit of tribal longevity & harmony which allowed relative stability for thousands of years before invader came. It is closer, and in touch with, the ideals you have heard of behind "Counting Coup" (touching others as more meaningful than attacking them in the context of intensities). If we then see the lyrical metaphor-ing of the ancient tribal way, we see that the word "touch" is not merely physical...If we also have a resistance awareness we recall that much meanings have been lost in translations made often by invader officials whose interest and/or education has been to obfuscate/fog-up awareness.

Here then we begin to see this with words like "enemy" as well; that there is a heart difference between the ways that peoples in harmony with their & Mom Earth's natures perceive. I.e. that they never truly demonized others; that intense poetics served to art puzzles, and intense interactions served to get our hearts across to others who didn't seem to "get it"!

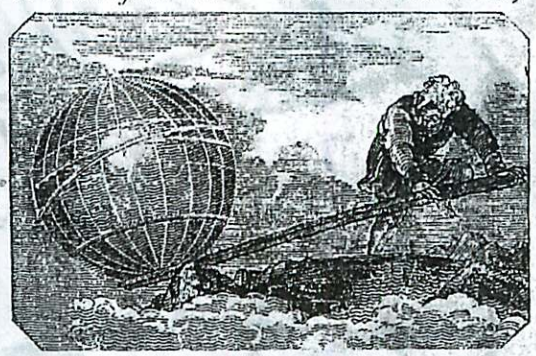
The Archimedean Point?
Self-Activity

Where is the ultimate point to which each of us can apply the most leverage for changing our world?

This question has already been answered in a thousand ways in just about every religion, philosophy and ideology produced in history. However, all of these answers are useful primarily to priests, dogmatists and ideologues rather than to those of us who refuse ideologies. They each require first and foremost that we adopt a necessary ideological standpoint, including its pre-given attitudes and values. And that we simultaneously renounce our own actual standpoint – our attitudes and values, our own selves – as the price of ideological submission.



Archimedes moves the world. Engraving from Mechanics Magazine, 1824.

The physical point from which Archimedes of Syracuse claimed that he would be able to move the Earth off its foundation is obviously mythical. As is the ideal "Archimedean point" from which an observer could be said to obtain a purely objective and therefore complete view of an object. The first is an imaginary point of leverage (application of force using a lever to magnify its effectiveness), the second an imaginary point of view (a perspectiveless perspective like that attributed to an omniscient god). Neither is of much use to those of us who want to actually change our world in our own liberating, non-ideological ways.

However, there is a far more practical, metaphorical sense in which the idea of an Archimedean point can be of immense use. That sense involves claiming or re-claiming our own self-activity – activity that originates from no presumed standpoint or knowledge, and no attitudes or values, outside what we create and experience as our own. This is the point where a reversal of perspective and will upends everything!

This Archimedean point is both the simplest and – for most people – seemingly the hardest thing to master. So simple and easy that young children – before they are corrupted by all the more insidious forms of modern socialization – often have little problem with it. (Consider, for example, the charmingly innocent but occasionally quite complex manipulations of a child seeking the shortest path to your affections.) But it is also so hard – once these same children are domesticated and successfully civilized – that it is often never again conceived or attempted.

A remnant of our autonomous self-activity still underlies our everyday lives. Without it even the choice of submission to civilized institutional life would be impossible. But it has been at the same time everywhere undermined, devalued and ideologically denied. It is this remnant of autonomous self-activity that allows us to recognize ourselves as ourselves at all – rather than as mere objects, roles or performances. But, as the collective histories of our everyday lives demonstrate, this submerged remnant of autonomous self-activity alone cannot withstand the increasingly sophisticated, and ever more widespread reach of the institutions of modern enslavement.

The reclamation and complete generalization of our own self-activity is the key to changing our world. This is the Archimedean point for the creation of any genuinely liberatory change. Anything less means continuing submission to the patterns of enslavement we have historically allowed to dominate our lives. Our choices at each moment here and now are refusal of all forms of institutional and ideological domination or acceptance of and submission to this domination. The goal of the Modern Slavery project is the creation of a theory and practice that introduces and encourages this refusal as the non-recuperable central reference point for libertarian critique. -Jason McQuinn
